Alzheimer's Care Card #7
Alzheimer's & Eating

Use simple, one-step instructions such as “pick up your fork,” and “put it in your mouth.” Repeat instructions often.

Provide a calm environment at mealtime. Limit the number of choices a person has to make.

If food intake is poor, provide nutritional snacks. Look for foods that trigger a person's desire to eat. Try to serve favorite foods often.

Sometimes patients lose the ability to sense hot or cold. Take care not to let them burn their mouths.

To reduce confusion, use a plate with no design and that is a different color than the place mat or cloth.

Don't try to convince the person whether or not a meal has been eaten.

Use a bendable straw or a cup with a top for the person who has difficulty drinking. Fill glasses only half full.

If the person chokes easily, cut the food into very small pieces or puree. Use foods with soft consistency.

Remind the person to eat slowly. Encourage chewing each bite well. Put only one utensil and one food in front of the person at a time. If it is easier, use finger foods.

Try using adaptive devices such as curved spoons, sectioned plates, or plates with a “lip” for persons who have difficulty using regular utensils.
